Sonja Glad, MA, NCC, LCPC

Sonja Glad, MA, NCC, LCPC first heard about EMDR in the late 1990s at a conference on Childhood Sexual Abuse. The statistics reported an almost unbelievably positive recovery rate for trauma victims treated with EMDR. In the next several years, Sonja attended other workshops and training that continued to support the positive treatment outcomes for clients who had EMDR as part of their treatment regime.

In 2005, Sonja attended the first two levels of training for EMDR and immediately started using it in her practice. Since then, she has attended over 100 hours of training in the utilization of EMDR and her clients regularly benefit from her training and experience. She became a Certified Therapist in EMDR, through EMDRIA, the International Associations of EMDR practitioners, in 2007. Two years later, she became an Approved Consultant. Not only does she use EMDR to effectively treat her clients, but she also hosts a group for therapists who are trained in EMDR.

"Having this therapeutic tool available to me helps me feel empowered as I work with clients who have experienced trauma," says Sonja. "It's not easy, but boy is it worth it."

EMDR

Will it work for you?

Sonja Glad, MA,
NCC, LCPC

The answer is: YES!

Have you experienced a trauma such as:

- Loss of a loved one
- Divorce
- Physical or sexual abuse
- Combat trauma
- Medical or dental trauma
- Loss of a job
- Natural Disasters

Or do you have a fear that stops you from doing something that you want to do?

- Fear of flying
- Fear of crossing bridges
- Fear of certain animals
- Fear of public speaking
- Fear of failure or success
- Fear of dying or others dying

Then EMDR (Eye Movement Desensitization and Reprocessing) could be the therapeutic treatment option for you.

What is EMDR

EMDR (eye movement, desensitization and reprocessing) was developed in the late 1980s by psychologist Francine Shapiro. She noticed that when she was walking and looking back and forth, her troublesome thoughts became less distressing. She studied this further and found that with a certain protocol along with eye movements, trauma victims were able to resolve their traumas in a relatively short period of time. Since then, many studies have been done that show that EMDR is effective with not only trauma, but also anxiety disorders, phobias, performance enhancement and grief. How is EMDR used in your treatment process?

The therapist in EMDR will first take a detailed history to help assess whether you are a good candidate for EMDR treatment. She will help you identify the goals for therapy and how together you can attain these goals. The therapist will then help you develop coping techniques. Once you and your therapist have established a trusting relationship and the therapist feels you are ready, EMDR sessions can begin.

You will be asked to recall a picture that represents your trauma or fear. As you focus on that picture, the therapist will ask:

- Based on this picture, what negative belief do you have about yourself?
- What would you like to believe?
- How true does it feel?
- Based on this picture, what emotions do you feel about the incident?
- Where do you feel it in your body?
- How disturbing is it to you?

The therapist will then initiate visual, auditory, or tactile bilateral stimulation, stopping occasionally to discuss with you what is happening.

The session continues until the intensity of the feelings associated with the incident diminishes and frequently people come to a new understanding about themselves. EMDR sessions usually last 1-1 1/2 hours per session. Many people can process a simple trauma in 1-3 sessions, then other issues can be processed using EMDR or talk therapy.

Once your intense feelings have dissipated and you are no longer suffering from the effects of the incident, you will work on redefining yourself, identifying triggers, reviewing what you have learned and work on strategies to prevent a return to your former state of mind. Then it will be time to say goodbye to your therapist. Total treatment could be as short as 5 sessions or could be incorporated into long term therapy or anywhere in between. The length of treatment is dependent on the complexity of your particular goals for therapy.
